What do I do if a friend tells me about relationship violence, sexual assault, stalking, or sexual harassment?

You can show you care about your friend by listening, respecting their choices, and connecting them to supportive resources.

Express Support

Here are some ideas of what you can say:

- “I'm here to listen and support you.”
- “I believe you.”
- “It took a lot of courage to tell me about this.”
- “Thank you for trusting me.”
- “You didn’t do anything to deserve this.”
- “You are not alone.”
- “Why were you there?”
- “Had you been drinking?”

Offer to Help Connect With Resources

Knowing what resources are available can help someone along their path to healing. Gently ask your friend if they are interested in learning about supportive resources. Offer to connect them with trained professionals who can help or offer to visit supportmore.msu.edu with them to learn about what services are available.

*Programs exempt from MSU RVSM mandatory reporting policies.

Remember:

It's not your job to find out details about what occurred. Avoid asking questions such as:

- “Why were you there?”
- “Had you been drinking?”

This may make your friend feel judged or blamed.

Follow Up

There is no one “correct way” to process these experiences. Peoples’ emotions and behaviors after these experiences often change over time. Checking in occasionally to ask, “How have you been doing?” or “Can I help in any way?” can help your friend know they are not alone.
